CHFA is pleased to announce its Executive Director and CEO, Cris White, has received a Most Admired CEO Award from the Denver Business Journal (DBJ)! White was selected as a 2020 recipient from a pool of more than 100 nominees. DBJ's Most Admired CEO Award honors outstanding chief executives (and those holding equivalent titles) in the Denver metropolitan area at for-profit and nonprofit companies that are innovators, standard-bearers, role models, and exceptional leaders.

"Thank you to the Denver Business Journal for this tremendous honor and humbling recognition. Also, thank you to every member of the CHFA team for their extraordinary work and dedication towards realizing our vision that everyone in Colorado will have the opportunity for housing stability and economic prosperity. I owe this special recognition to them," said White.

White has served as CHFA's executive director and CEO since 2010 and has been with the organization for more than 30 years.

CHFA's growth under White's leadership has been critical as Colorado grapples with an affordable housing crisis largely stemming from unprecedented population growth combined with a robust economy that has made housing unaffordable for many. The effects of the COVID-19 pandemic have recently intensified the affordable housing need and led to a new crisis for many industries, making White's leadership of CHFA's work statewide even more crucial.

White will be honored at a virtual event hosted by DBJ on November 12.
